GUIA: Cheap Bedding Essentials (cama)

When we set up our bedroom, I kept it cheap and simple with IKEA. I got the SÄFFEROT duvet in 12 tog for €25 — and that tog rating matters here, because Irish bedrooms get genuinely cold at night. For the cover I used RODGERSIA (duvet cover plus two pillowcases) at €20, and a couple of SKOGSFRÄKEN high pillows at €24 each. The whole bed came together for well under what I expected, and the 12 tog duvet has been warm enough through the winter.

GUIA: Kitchen Essentials Under €100 (cozinha)

I kitted out the kitchen mostly from scratch. For pots and pans I went with a Tower Ceramica 6-piece set (€57.94) — having the pan and saucepans match and stack saved space in a small kitchen. I also picked up a pressure cooker (6L, €43.69), which is brilliant for cheap batch cooking like beans and stews. For storage and lunches, IKEA containers did the job cheaply: an IKEA 365+ set of 4 for €12 and a big PRUTA set of 17 for €6. Plates were OFTAST at €3 each. A small manual food chopper (a Ram one I found for a few euro) saved me crying over onions. None of it was fancy, but it all works.

(Nota: o chopper Ram pode estar indisponível na Amazon — confirme antes de linkar; se estiver fora de estoque, mencione sem link ou troque por um similar.)

GUIA: Working From Home in a Small Irish Apartment (home office)

I built my work setup on a budget. The desk was an IKEA UTVISNING gaming desk with a shelf for €99 — the shelf is great for clearing the surface in a small room. For the chair I got a Bigzzia ergonomic chair (no RGB, black) for €95.99 off Amazon.ie. I went back and forth on spending on a chair, but after a few full days working from a kitchen chair, my back made the decision for me. If you're working from home long-term, the chair is where I'd spend first.

GUIA: Smart Storage for Small Irish Rentals (storage)

Storage in a shared rental was all about cheap, take-it-with-you boxes from IKEA. I used SAMLA boxes (€9) for bigger stuff, KUGGIS (€6.50) and DRÖNA (€3.50) for shelves and corners, and a KLIPPKAKTUS box (€4) to organise the fridge. A SEKINER over-door hook (€3) added hanging space without drilling — important when you're renting and want your deposit back. Honourable mention to the FRAKTA bags (€3): cheap, huge, and they survive everything from moving day to laundry runs.

GUIDA: Drying Clothes in Ireland (já tem base, reforçar)

In our shared house we bought a portable airer at The Range — one that's taller than it is wide, which genuinely saves floor space when you don't have much. Even with a washing machine, the airer is non-negotiable here, because nothing dries outside in the Irish damp.

GUIDA: Staying Dry in Ireland (já tem base, reforçar)

We arrived in winter, and even coming from a cold, rainy city in Brazil, this was a different level — it rains almost every day. To save money we went to Decathlon and got windproof, waterproof jackets for about €70 each. Other brands are great but the price jumps fast; Decathlon was the sweet spot.

GUIDA: UK vs EU Plugs (já feito)

I didn't buy an adapter before flying, which was a mistake — my first night I couldn't charge anything. The next day I grabbed a UK adapter at a local supermarket for about €4–5. Cheap and easy, but I wish I'd had one in my bag when I landed.

GUIDA: Best Cheap Air Fryers (já feito)

Ours actually came with the house we moved into — which turns out to be really common here. A lot of Irish rentals already have one, so check before you buy.
